In this highlight, Dennis Byron speaks on... the need for international criminal justice to become routine

The transcript of the highlight begins on the following page.

00:00 I, I would, would, would think that it's, it would be useful for the, for international criminal justice to become a, a, a routine part of the, of the modern world, because that will assist in guaranteeing the application of the rule of law to human rights activities worldwide. And it will also assist in guaranteeing the adherence to principles of international humanitarian law.

00:44 So, with or without the continuation of this tribunal, the principles which the tribunal has stood for, the, the body of jurisprudence it has built up, I hope it will be part of the foundation stones of an international criminal, criminal system.
