In this highlight, Philippe Larochelle speaks on... massive amounts of evidence

- 00:00 Well, basically, we have, we have to deal with over 40,000 pages of testimony, many, many thousand pages of exhibits from radio broadcast to UN cables to prior statements to Rwandan constitution through various political parties' manifesto. These are the exhibits we have to use. We have to . . .
- 00:31 And, what makes the task more difficult, I can say, is the fact that the Prosecutor has not yet figured out himself how to use this massive amount of evidence to prove its case against (___), against the various defendants.
- 00:47 So, we have, there's a, there's a – we received the Prosecutor's brief at the beginning of the month of October which is riddled with misleading information, that quotes five exhibits out of the 420 that the Prosecutor hasn't used in that trial. So there's a bit of a – we're not so much answering a case as to trying to figure it out. There was . . .
